On the cover of our April issue of Maine Running Magazine is the highly personable Charles Serritella of Caribou, Maine. He and the powerful Tony Toluba are on either side of the famous Bernarr Macfadden, at Macfadden's Physical Culture Hotel in 1937.

Charlie and Tony had just finished walking 45 miles in 9 hours and 42 minutes. Read all about one of Dr. Serritella's early experiences in the first of many "Walking For Health" articles.

Deke is back with his reflections on his old coach "Sabe". Sabe died recently of cancer and it is that time of year again when most runners in Maine turn there attention to that disease as the second annual races in memory of Terry Fox are coming up in early May. On May first there will be races to remember Terry in Bangor, Caribou and Ellsworth and then on the 7th, Portland will hold their annual event. Let's see if the other three locations can come anywhere near the 400 plus that showed up in Brewer last year.

Bill Peabody is back with the latest on Maine runners competing south of the border and Dr. Frachella shares an article about how sick we all are with us.

I am swamped with great material for future issues of MR, so if you sent something and it isn't here, look again next month. It couldn't hurt sales either.

Finally I'd like to welcome the fine people from James Bailey, Co. of Middle Street in downtown Portland to the list of yearly advertisers. When you're in the store, thank Charlie and Bob for their ongoing support of the sport of running in Maine.

CRANDYGRAM

Budweiser Light of Bangor and Larry and Gary Allen, race directors of the renowned Great Cranberry Island Road Race have announced the date of this year's fifth annual event as June 25, 1983 and the following procedure for gaining entry into this traditionally popular race.

Entry application forms will be available on April 1, 1983 at Bangor area sporting goods stores, in the April issue of Maine Running Magazine, or by sending a self-addressed stamped envelope to 470 Birch St., Apt 2, Bangor, Me. 04401.

The first 100 completed applications received back via return mail will be accepted. All remaining applications received back by Wednesday, May 11, 1983 will be placed into a lottery and the remaining 100 acceptances will be randomly drawn on Friday, May 13, 1983.

Last year's event attracted national media attention as 600 runners from 18 states vied for one of the coveted 200 available spots in this unique 3.1 (5km) race. The race held on small, scenic Great Cranberry Island, a fishing village and traditional summer vacation home of many artists, has become a summer highlight for many runners and their families from all over the Eastern U.S.

"Entry into the race can be tough", says co-race director Larry Allen. "We already have over 100 requests for applications from many states. Naturally those runners in Maine have an advantage with increased access to applications and decreased return mail time, we hope they'll use their advantage to help maintain the Maine flavor of the race."

The race is being sponsored this year by Maine Distributors of Bangor, distributors of Budweiser Light.

Last year's winners and record holders Mike Gaige (14:51) and Sue Elias (18:06) are expected to return and attempt to better their course records against a top field of runners, yet race organizers insist that entered runners of all abilities are welcome, and anyone may also try for the record at the other extreme (38:06). However, the toughest competition of all may be among those just trying to enter the event.

RUMINATIONS ON SABE

"....I ran for Bowdoin in '71, down in the Land of the Midnight Sun
so sit right down and hear the tale..."

(Anon.)

Rick Krause gave a fine testimonial, but I noted with amusement what he had left out. The fine won-loss statistics were there for all to see: 57-43 for coaching cross-country, 72-25 for track. These statistics, carefully and cosmetically collected from 1972 through 1981, might deceive one to think that Frank Sabasteanski's overall statistics were as impressive. Alas, they were not, and the teams in which we participated did much to lower the average.

I choose to believe that we were not negligent, nor were we slovenly or defeatist. We just didn't win very much, yet emerged from the experience alive. And somehow, looking back on the years that I knew Sabe, that seems a very large part of my life.

When Sabe had a great talent, he knew how to develop it, but during my Bowdoin years he had precious little opportunity. We were members of classes weighted heavily with specialists; we muttered that admission to Bowdoin was guaranteed only if one was a flutemaker's apprentice in the Chang Tang Highlands over the previous 9 years. Well-rounded individuals need not apply. Yet now I realize that if we had been members of more well-rounded classes, how could we ever have made a college varsity team, we of modest abilities, hopes, and 4:45 high-school mile PRs?

It all makes such wonderful sense now, because despite our mediocrity, we were a team, and it is the team, not the record, that is worth remembering. Some teams are worth remembering because of their quality, and I was even a captain of one such team, the '72 State crosscountry champions. But I was not a member of that team. I was an old road dog, a relic from another era, given the captaincy as a pathetic honorarium for my seniority. Perhaps that team of young lions have their own story to tell, but it is not mine. Mine begins in the fall of '70.

"...so sit right down and hear the tale of Captain Toby Coverdale.
Captain Toby was a champ
Never felt no pain nor cramp
Ran the quarter, half, 600...

All the boys at Bowdoin wondered Lived there runner ere could nail Captain Toby Coverdale?"

CAPTAIN TOBY wasn't really a champ, though he certainly was competitive enough to be one. He simply had too many outlets for his aggression, the primary one being Doctor Bassett. Toby's hatred of Doctor Bassett was so venomous, so passionate so complete in its all-enveloping purity, that we were awe-inspired by its Platonic idealism.

Doctor Bassett wasn't a doctor, although there was doubt in nobody's mind, least of all Doctor Bassett's, that he would become one. His fine, ingratiating manner assured that he would have his personal ambitions satisfied. He was entirely inoffensive to anyone who didn't stand in his way. Because we did not stand in his way, most of us could not truly participate in Toby's hatred, but could only watch in amusement. But Doctor Bassett had stepped hard on Toby's toes, when he took the James Bowdoin Cup away from him.

The James Bowdoin Cup is the annual Bowdoin student/athlete award, given to the varsity letter winner with the highest grade-point average. For 1970, Toby figured he had earned it. Only a 24-hour tool could earn a higher average. Doctor Bassett was such a tool, of course, but he would never have the time to earn a legitimate varsity letter. But the crosscountry team in the fall of '69 was decimated by injury, until only four men were left. Doctor Bassett saw his chance, jogged a few races, picked up his letter, and grabbed the Cup. Toby was livid. But then, Toby was always livid.

Doctor Bassett was only the most conspicuous chip on Toby's shoulder. Probably the biggest was his name. He was Miles Coverdale, Jr. namesake of an obscure sixteenth-century Anglican theologian whom Toby could not have resembled in the least and of his father, whom Toby probably resembled very much. Miles Coverdale Sr. was a Long Island entrepreneur, retired at 35 to indulge his passion in antique autos, an amiable enough fellow upon first meeting, probably because he had cracked enough eggs to make his omelet. Toby inherited the seething competitiveness, and carried it as a curse. Toby even cast himself in the role of Oliver Barrett IV, the protagonist in Erich Segal's Love Story, wrote a story calling his father Old Stony Face and carried the parallels as far as he could, to the point of romancing a Catholic girl from an old New England mill town. She had honeyblond hair, a sunny temperament, and while we agreed that Toby was worth saving, we also agreed that she was too good for him.

That, in a nutshell, was Captain Toby, a man seething in a body not fast enough for him and carrying a nickname which suggested a large, amiable house pet, which he definitely was not. But he was a true Captain, a sharply defined personality among many which Sabe knew enough when to humor and when to leave well enough alone.

Sabe, for example, never faulted us that our prime competition efforts in the winter of '70-71 were directed to the Bassetti Cup Table Hockey Championship. The Bassetti Cup, naturally, was named for the lately-mentioned Doctor and the prize he so rudely stole. Toby's only remaining hope was for the Bassetti Cup, for which he would have given both of anything he had. There were obstacles, of course. Wayne Gardiner's Canadiens and my California Golden Seals posed no threat, despite my recruiting of Reggie Jackson as a defenseman; he never took well to the ice. Kevin Savage's Bruins had the best early record, employing a classic style, but he faded in the late-season push. The Bruins, in fact, nearly suffered an ignominious tie with the Golden Seals in lateseason play, a disaster averted only when Reggie Jackson, overcome with excitement, dumped the puck in his own net with 3 seconds to play. John Asa-trian's team was a poorly-organized expansion club, the Acapulco Goals, consisting of badly-coked rejects from other teams. He was even beaten by the lowly Seals on the slushy Acapulco ice. Nick Sampsidis' Rangers, though hardly better organized, had far more talent, and were about at parity with the Bruins by the end of the season, through the use of a two-handed table-hockey slap shot seen nowhere else.

But Toby's only real obstacle came from Mark Cuneo's Vancouver Canucks, and Mark's fine veterans, Center Francois and Right Winger Roberto. Because of certain exit-visa difficulties, these gentlemen had never given their last names, but these flaws were overlooked. Francois and Roberto were too popular, having introduced both the faifong and the high-low to Bassetti Cup play. How could I explain the high-low, the faifong, the Patented crosshand defense, to video-game freaks? The high-low was introduced in the Bassett Cup Semis, Mark's Canucks against Toby's Pittsburgh Penguins. In the second game of a five game series, with Vancouver humiliating Pittsburgh 8-0 and the highlow scoring at will, Toby flung the rink against the wall. Even Terry Sawchuk, Vancouver's long-dead goalie, who had been enjoying a quiet evening at his end of the rink, was jolted awake. With the field of play destroyed, the Commissioner awarded the Canucks both the game and the series. The Bassetti Cup ultimately went to the Canucks, after an anticlimactic final against the Bruins. Everyone agreed that the replacement rink didn't have the same good action.

I SAID THAT THE STORY BEGAN in the fall of '70. Maybe it started when the time-space matrix blossomed out of the Physical Singularity in what physicists simply call The Event. But, since I don't know the story in between, I should start as with the Bates-Vermont-Bowdoin crosscountry tri-meet in November 1970.

I had by then established myself as number-two man on a squad without much native talent, save for top man Mark Cuneo. So it was a friendly team, not beset by rivalries within or terrified of losing. Nor we were afraid of winning, either, on those rare circumstances when we had a chance. In our first tri-meet of the season we used classic strategy, keeping a tight pack through the first mile and then exploding through the field in a demoralizing charge, soundly beating St. Anselm's and Merrimack. But Amherst, Williams and Colby had not cooperated, and we had not performed well at the State meet at Orono. The season was winding down, and we had no place to go.

The race against Bates and Vermont figured to be a hopeless attempt to save some trace of dignity. We sat around the locker room silently, unlike ourselves, wondering how we could all lose our way on the course and be able to explain it as an accident. Then Sabe came in, shuffling merrily, and gave us a little pep talk. "Now boys," he said, "we all know how strong Bates and Vermont are. They'll probably be waging a rematch of the Easterns Championships. This race means a lot to both of them. I just want to say to you guys, I want you to run well, but DON'T SCREW UP THE MEET." He gave a little smile. "Don't try anything foolish and get in their way. Just relax and run your best. Remember, when rape is inevitable, relax and enjoy it."

I don't ever dare hope to hear a pep talk like that again, but it worked. We immediately relaxed. We took off and thundered down the course to the strains of the William Tell Overture, blaring out a dormitory window. Mark was the only casualty, thinking he should be fast enough to stay with the lead pack. He burned out, failed to finish, and for the first and only time in my college career I was the top Bowdoin finisher. Overall, I may have finished as high as 15th place.

As the fall grew darker and colder, and the cross-country season ended, our excitement grew, because we knew we were getting stronger and sharper. Mark, Toby, Wayne and I turned out 10 65-second quarter miles on the Whittier field track one afternoon, but it was getting too cold to race well outdoors. It was time to run in the Cage.

The Cage held a narrow, banked, 140-yard dirt track, 12 1/2 laps to the mile.

Despite the cramped area, the track was actually quite fast, at least for distance races. For the 600-yard runners, though, it was a nightmare, with the runners immediately going into a turn at the start. Toby would be running the 600 and wished he still had the forearm cast he had worn early in the cross-country season. The cast had almost been used on one occasion, during a Monopoly game. Toby nearly brained his girlfriend when she sold a hotel to The Snake for $1500 after Toby had offered to buy it for $1000. The Snake was one of Toby's roommates, but he hated him just the same, and saw the sale as an act of treason.

Mark and I wouldn't have to worry about elbows and forearms in the two-mile, which was the ideal distance on the track. The banks were just right to keep us hugging the inside line, propelling us through the short straightaways. Mark had his eye on the school 2-mile record, and I wanted to keep him as close as I could. We were planning an effort for the intrasquad meet on the first weekend of December. There was much work to do.

As gently as he could, Mark explained that we would have to do some mile-rep workouts. Being innocent, I thought nothing much about it. Stay as close as you can, Deke. You should be able to handle 4:55 pace; just find out what you can do. The first mile felt okay, in about 4:54, and we began an 8-minute walk. At first it was pleasant, but as we walked and I kept seeing the giant timing-clock sweep around I lost track of time. Apprehension began to gnaw at me. When we began the second mile, the apprehension left, but as I approached the third-quarter mark I began to feel a vise around my chest which tightened until I passed the finish in 4:57. Relief again as I started to walk, but the apprehension came earlier this time, spreading from the stomach through the lower back. The vise began squeezing me earlier in the third mile, and I had to fight to finish in 5:00 flat. I was drowning, but so were the others. We took a longer break before the last mile, and it helped to know it was the last. We finished together in 4:57.

I was devastated enough without coming down with the 24-hour flu the same night. I had the terrifying experience of vomiting so hard that blood came up. That night I lay helpless in my fraternity-house bed while Rico Petrocelli and Ken Harrelson were making a cameo appearance in the living room downstairs. It was nothing to me except I regretted missing the sight of Lou Tripaldi bounding down the stairs shouting, "The...HAAAWWWKKK!!"

Ten days later, just back from Thanksgiving break, I was preparing for practice when Mark came in the locker.
"Hey Deke.." he grinned, "guess what?"
I yelped, grabbed my shoes in my mouth, and huddled on the bench. I knew what was coming.

Surprisingly, though, it went well, and without the harrowing aftermath.
4:53, 4:55, 4:57, and a finishing 4:51.
Mark dropped out of the last mile, and I kept going, exhausted but entirely relaxed, with a feeling of confidence I had never experienced before. In scarcely a week, I would spend this investment entirely on one race, meaningless except to us who would run it.

On December 5, 1970, Mark, Wayne and I took the line for the start of the Unadvertised Special 2-mile event in the intrasquad meet. We had planned in great detail everything we could. Wayne must take out the first half-mile in 2:20. Then I'd take over, and try to hit the mile in 4:45. Then Mark would be ready to take over en route to his record attempt. I really thought a 4:45 split for the mile was a bit spicy, but I'd try. I wondered if Sabe had any idea what we were doing.

As all the great races seem to be, this one went by almost too fast to recall. Wayne did his job perfectly, passing the half in 2:20 even. I took over, feeling good, if a little stiff with tension. As we came up to the mile, Mark was a little impatient, and went by me. He passed the mile in 4:49, with me a second behind. From then on, I remember nothing. A voice from the balcony above, a fleeting thought that I mustn't let Mark lap me, that is all. Everything was focused on the moment. There wasn't even any anticipation of finishing; just run until somebody tells you to stop. Suddenly Mark was finished, and I was too, hearing somebody call nine forty-nine as I passed the scorer's table.

Our joy in the shower-room was unparalleled. Everyone else had treated the meet for what it was, an intrasquad trial, but Mark had his school record, I had my sub-ten, and Wayne, though he had just missed breaking ten, had a better time than he had expected.

Though I could scarcely have known it, this would be my fastest collegiate time. Over the winter, I would lose the base I had unconsciously built up over the fall. Twenty miles a week, mostly of interval work, were not enough. Sabe encouraged us to run outdoors, but did not supervise us to see whether we did. We did not. After all we had season passes to see all of the games leading up to the Bassetti Cup, and we took full advantage of the privilege.

BY EARLY FEBRUARY we were a team. We did not have the measure of greatness, but at least the weightmen and runners were kr talking to each other. That was no small achievement, considering our daily confronal tations in the restricted confines of Hyde Cage. It was a constant battle for territor with shifting tides from moment to moment. The weightmen, firmly dug in beside a circl at one corner of the track, held onto their se small piece of ground with stolid determina pu tion. The runners were Viet Cong, skimming po lightly over large expanses of land, never really making a stand for any one piece of real estate. The weightmen regularly poundein the track with 35-pound artillery, cratering the 1-mile starting line, but the runners always managed to move away in time. The bombing was especially bad when Sabe was trying to break in some untrained slab of beef with the 35-pound weight. Such dangers were a wonderful diversion from the anaerob pains of our ladder-interval workouts.

We tolerated the shelling because we had to. Sabe was perhaps the best authority in the country on the hammer and 35-pound weight, and somehow he always converted the slabs of beef into big point-getters. They appeared to have some basic intelligence, judging from Sabe's ability to get a training response out of them. We became respectful enough to listen to their grunts for the patterns which one day might form the found tion for human language.

We finally made inter-species contact with one of the weightmen, a specimen by the name of Hogs Healey. Toby had collected a group of us, including Hogs, for a ski weekend at Mittersill, in the Waterville Valley. On our return, we made up a little ditty about Hogs to the beat of 'Big John', an old Jimmy Dean song. According to the tale, Bowdoin was trailing Tufts by a hopeless margin with about six events to go in a dual meet, when Hogs stepped into the breach. He then won the long jump, pole vault, high jump, mile and two-mile, and finished his day and his life with the mighty heave of the 35-pound weight, bringing the fieldhouse crashing down upon him. It wouldn't be the first, nor the last, time that the weightmen had earned our victory for us. We wrote down our song, and posted it on the bulletin board on the outside of the Cage. Thus began the Week of the Poet.

Throughout the following week, unknown authors posted various farcical poems outside the cage, lampooning several members of the team. Then, near the end of the week, the Crown Jewel appeared. The Legend of Captain Toby' was, by popular acclaim, a track art classic. It was even published in the school paper, a deserved bit of recognition even if the reputed author was one of the editors. The poem told the tragic story of Captain Toby's untimely death from a temper tantrum suffered after his defeat in the Interfraternity Meet quarter-mile at the hands of the rumored author of the piece:

"He never rose up from the track
But simply lay upon his back
And kicked his feet, and cried and cried
And there poor Captain Toby died.
A plaque was placed with warning made:
Don't shit when first you should parade!"

Even this poet laureate had been forced to come up with one of Sabe's aphorisms to express his meaning. A man who shit in the parade had failed in the clutch. The man with the pen had inflicted a mortal wound, and had Toby's number forever after. Toby, enjoying an indulgent, therapeutic session of Bassett-hatred, failed to notice.

WINTER'S WEEKEND. The only highligh of Darkest February. My two-mile times had not improved; in fact, I had not broken ten minutes again. Still, Sabe had not put the pressure on me until no But now, in a two-mile against Colby, I run the two-mile as our top man. Mark we moving down to the mile.

My mental preparation for the race had been far from ideal. My girlfriend had conveniently called me two nights before to explain she'd been pinned by somebody else. I was steaming, but unable to get in a hard, purging workout before the race. So I arrived at the cage early that Saturday afternoon to find that it was steaming, too. The heat had been left on too high, and on this relatively mild day, it had not dissipated. The weightmen and the jumpers loved the extra heat, so no windows were opene In fact, nobody had attempted to open th cage windows for several decades. Sabe suggested for me to do a light warmup outdoors, but as I stepped from the hot cage directly into the outside air, the shock was too much. I had become hopelessly housebound.

As I stepped to the line for the start of the two-mile, I saw that my only competition was Colby's Lew Pacquin, a far better runner than I, but fatigued after a hard mile. As the race began, I saw that he wasn't responding well, so I took the lead. The half-mile, then the mile went by, and to my shock I discovered that my lead was increasing. I had broken the chain. The race was mine.

After a comfortable 4:55 first mile I decided not to risk a sub-ten-minute effort. Winning was all that counted. I could even clinch the team victory with this race. My concentration wavered a little when the "2" card was raised with 3 laps to go, but I shook it off, even raising the pace a bit. A lap later I felt a sharp twinge, and tried to ignore it. I wanted to hear the gun go off in my ear.

At the end of the 24th and beginning of the last lap my lead was unassailable, but something was terribly, terribly wrong, though I couldn't place it. I

giant reached down from the balcony and pulled me straight up by my tail. Utterly helpless, I staggered a few more yards, bumping against the wall, and collapsed. The place was quiet. Eons passed, until finally Pacquin, then Wayne, passed me by.

Morally, I had won the race in 10:06. Physically, Pacquin won in a slow 10:15. I walked into the locker room and threw up. Feeling better, I came back in time to see Nick clinch the team victory with a win in the 1000.

Sabe came to console me in his dust- and cigar-laden office. "I think you got a little too excited with 3 laps left. That mistake in the lap count threw you off, didn't it?" He was trying to make excuses for me, but I didn't need them. My fate this day was so cruel, so pitiful, that humor was the only way to go. So I kept company that night with Mark, Wayne, Toby and their girlfriends, wallowing in commiseration, drinking champagne and sacrificially intervening when Toby, for reasons unknown, nearly came to blows with The Snake. Soon everyone in my company was sharing my experience in this ship-of-fools of a day. At least I knew I'd be a survivor.

NOT LONG AFTER the Colby meet, I became injured. I don't remember the type of injury, but it wasn't serious, and I was healed in scarcely over a week. I didn't even miss any regular meets, only the Interfraternity Meet and the State AAU's. I didn't even miss any practices, though I didn't run them. On a late winter's midafternoon, there was precious little to do but go to the cage, shoot the breeze with the boys, and sometimes sit in the office and listen to Sabe's politics. For Sabe was an oligarchist, a believer in government rule by a trained elite. Since our classroom exposure tended toward soft-core Marxism, Sabe's theories seemed quaint. Actually, they didn't stray very far from the principles of Plato's Republic, though Sabe fully, he never tried to connect his coaching to his political theories. We were not the schoolboys on the playing-fields of Eton testing the principles of battle. Sabe just thought we'd like to know that he was a citizen, too, and had opinions as a citizen should. It was a vision we had not really grasped, a vision of a future when we would not be able to borrow the opinions of others, but would have to form our own.

I healed in time to run in our final dual meet of the season, against Vermont. The training hiatus helped. For the first and only time in my career, I managed a negative-split 2-mile, with my second mile considerably faster than my first. On the final lap I even managed something approximating a sprint. My time was not good enough to mention, but my feeling after the race was. We won the meet, and had the bus driver hammer for home to see the Bowdoin-Vermont hockey game the same night. That night, even the Bassetti Cup would have to take second billing to the real thing.

SO ENDED OUR SEASON. Spring track couldn' be, and was not, the same. Outside the cage, we were different creatures. I became a considerably slower creature. Bassetti Cup hockey was done. Mark decided not to run any more. Toby, responding to a mild provocation of Doctor Bassett's, told him to f#&§ off, and thereafter was not quite the discontented, tormented soul I had known. Captain Toby had ended his reign and gone into hibernation.

So what, indeed, is this rambling narrative about? It has no clear ending; I simply stopped it. Surely I could have talked more about the things Sabe did, like breaking up his weekend and driving to Orono to the 1972 indoor AAU's because I wanted to run the mile. But any confirmed track nut would have done the same, and some track nuts cover the entire spectrum of human personality. The only way I can tell a story about Sabe is to tell a story about us. He never intruded upon our fragile dignity, though he was always eager to offer advice. He offered friendship, but demanded no allegiance. He was always willing to offer his vulnerabilities to us. Where else would I have encountered a coach who admitted he would be pleased to be the godfather of any of our Catholic-born children?

I was drunk, and no mistake. Less than five hours after finishing the fourth annual Rowdy Ultra 50-mile, and I had pledged to run another 50-miler three weeks hence. The Rowdies had done it to me again, plying me with Haffenreffers and Rolling Rocks after I had run out of my beloved St. Pauli Girl brew. In the race, I had not flattened myself in proper fashion, having cautiously gone through the motions to assure my special position as the only one of 77-odd billion humans since Adam to have finished all of the first four Rowdy Ultras. I was not really fit, to be sure, but I had not done myself honor with my backdoor approach. I had to remember to run with passion.

The party in the Bowdoin Gymnasium Multi-purpose room was broken up, so I rose unsteadily to my feet. Shakily, on leaden feet, I wobbled into the hallway. Most of the coaches had their offices here, with doors along the hall. Room 104 was Sabe's office, the one he rarely used because he preferred the dusty office next to the Cage. Ten years had gone by, though, and maybe he liked the new office now. There was no way to know for sure, unless I could find out where he was keeping his List of 50 Ready-Made Excuses. Wherever he held forth, he kept the list with him. Room 104 was locked, but there was a card on the door. Sabe was ill, he wasn't able to coach now. Somehow, I had to let him know that I cared. With fumbling hand I wrote on the card and stumbled on down the hallway. It was the pitiful least I could do. He cared for all of us, long after we left school.

I was feeling quite maudlin now, as I walked toward the Cage. The lights were still on. Run with passion...had I done so much as in this little place? Finally, a little resolve, which had scarcely come to me this day. Could I run now, on these stumps of legs? I had to try. The echoes were calling for me.

To my surprise, the dog-trot wasn't painful. The alcohol had numbed my nerveends, and in this magic place I had special dispensation to link with my memory. By the second lap I was running as fast as I had done at the start of the day, and by the third I was in the thick of that twomile with Mark and Wayne. It was a short two-mile, and after that third lap I heaved myself onto a high-jump pit. There were voices coming. A young fellow, talking to a girl, came into the Cage, walked over to a hose, and began to water the track, just as young Deke had done a decade before. I began to babble to him about how things always change and stay the same. He listened patiently as the old fool rambled on . perhaps wondering if he would be the same ten years hence. Finally, in the need to preserve some dignity, I shuffled off. No need for me to reenact my personal Eighty-Yard Run in front of them.

Yes, Sabe, you cared for all of us. And another thing: you'd make a crackerjack Godfather. I hope somebody asked.

AROOSTOOK JOGGERNAUTS

The Joggernauts started 1983 with a large group of runners viewing two excellent videotapes on long distance training and long distance conditioning by Albert Salazar's coach at the University of Oregon, Bill Dellinger.

The Club once again sponsored the annual Winter Triathlon as part of Caribou's Winter Carnival. It was a beautiful day for the event. This year, the 1-mile snowshoe and 5-mile ski events were held at the Caribou Country Club. The 5.7 mile run was from the Country Club to McDonald's; unfortunately, North Main hill was part of the course. Tom Towle of Fort Fairfield was the individual winner in 1:06:57.

Conrad Walton was second in 1:22:19; Jim Daigle third in 1:31:07; Harry Taylor, fourth in 1:37:54; Bob Duprey, fifth, in 1:39:42. Rusty Taylor got lost. Rumors that he was seen in Van Buren were false, and he did finish in 2:08:10. The winning open team was composed of Paul Plissey, Mark Hamlin, and Jim Dasch, in a time of 1:00:42. The winning mixed team was composed of Dennis Plant, Tom Campbell, and Donna Sund in 1:17:04. Other Joggernauts winning trophies as team members were: Dan Bondeson, Sam Hamilton, Anita Duprey, Judy Duprey, and Joanne Cyr. Owen Jackson's performance on snowshoes was incredible!!

The Joggernauts, with Northern National Bank as sponsor, are promoting a special competition known as the Northern Challenge. Runners will compete for prizes as a result of their performances in the following five County races: UMFK 5-miler, Fort Kent; Inn Race, Caribou; The Houlton 5 on the 4th; Potato Blossom, Fort Fairfield; and the Northern National in Presque Isle. More information and publicity will be forthcoming.

Over 20 races have been scheduled for Aroostook County this summer. Included among them are two triathlons. The first is a team event to be held on June 18 in Caribou and includes biking, canoeing, and running. The second triathlon is an individual event and is scheduled for August 27th in Presque Isle. It will include a 1/2-mile swim, 20-mile bike competition, and a five-mile run.

WOODS RUNNERS

What!!?? The Club column is due?? Jeez, Booker will have my head!! Let's see....news, stuff, things...lies...no, no...what am I saying!! Pain...pain...That's it!! I'll write about pain!! No...Skip's already done that ... twice!! Diet! Right! Good thought Duane! No...Dr. John does that stuff. Sex and the runner!! Good stuff... now let's see. What dear?? It's a bunch of garbage? Right!! Good Lord... what else is there?? Nerdlies running shorts!! That's it!! What a column that would make! Who's ever done one on running shorts before!! Brand name you ask?? I don't know. No one could ever get close enough to identify it. Nerdlie thinks a wash is a small ravine. Well, that's out! What else .... m m... oh yeah! The new officers of the Woods Runners!! Finally!! It seems like only yesterday that the last three nominees have gone on their way, convulsed in laughter...chortles of mirthful anguish echoing in the frosty air...slapping each other with gusto and screaming.. an officer of the Woods Runners!! ?? That Ritchie's got to be nuts!! What a kidder!! Ha, ha, ha ...oh my....ho, ho, ho!! Alan and Vicki Stevens.. oh yeah, I already called them...wonder why they hung up?!! It's that Nerdlie and Duane. They're the reason no one wants this job. Ya just can't warm up to those guys that don't shower or shave and eat garlic at the ten minute break. Maybe Coughlin or Mangus or some other club would take em...OR --- THE ROWDIES!! THAT'S IT. THEY'D MAKE GREAT ROWDIES!! PLEASE!! PLEASE, you guys!! Take em!! Take em!! Get em away from here!!!! Arrghhh .... What are you doing? What's the white coat for?!? What are ya doing with those buckles!??! MA!!!!!!

Eastern Collegiate Championships March 4-5 at Harvard U. In the 1000 yard run trials (3 heats, 3 qualify from each) Ann England of UMO set a school record with a 2:42.8 good for fourth in her heat. In the shot put, Maine's Barbara Lukacs finished 8th with a throw of 42'10'3"

Steve also saw where Bob Winn finished 3rd in a Cambridge 10K on March 20th in an impressive 30:44.
